Two giants of the 20th century, Sigmund Freud and Carl Jung, were personal and professional friends from 1906 until 1913. Their friendship ended when they could not agree about fundamental issues. Freud, by 1913 a famed and original thinker, went on to found a psychoanalytic movement that has profoundly influenced further developments in psychology.

Jung, after the painful split with his mentor and father-figure, withdrew from the psychoanalytic movement and began his own original work. His contributions live on in the discipline of Analytical Psychology, also called Jungian Psychology.

Freud's psychoanalytic movement and Jung's analytical psychology have undergone significant elaboration and modification in subsequent decades. However, the split between the two camps is still significant. There remain substantial differences in fundamental approaches to psychic processes and understanding of what it means to be human. Friday evening we will view the movie, “The Soloist,” and discuss it from two points of view--Freudian and Jungian.

Dr. Joseph Callahan will explore the relationship between Freud and Jung and the reasons for the disagreement that led to their painful parting.

Two analysts from the St. Louis Psychoanalytic Institute, Cheryl Lawler and Lenita Newberg, will give an overview of Freudian theory and its current status. Two Jungian analysts from the C.G. Jung Society of St. Louis, Sheldon Culver and Rose Holt, will offer a parallel overview of Jungian theory and its current status. We will explore a fairy tale from Freudian and Jungian perspectives to help clarify these two different approaches to psychic processes and human development.

In the workshop participants will have the opportunity to share their impressions and understandings of the two main- streams of Freudian and Jungian thought as they exist today.
