"The process of psychotherapy, when it goes at all deep, sets into motion profound and mysterious happenings."

E. Edinger, 1985

This Friday evening presentation and Saturday workshop will examine seven ancient alchemical processes that parallel the development of the human personality. Friday evening's presentation will consist of a PowerPoint overview of the processes, including examples from the dreams of moderns, images from old alchemical texts, as well as images from everyday life. Rose and Deborah, using both the work of alchemists and the researches of C.G. Jung, will show how very much alive and helpful alchemical images and processes can be for understanding one's (and others') individuation process.

Carl Jung often drew and painted his own images in order to elucidate and understand his unconscious processes. Saturday's workshop will be a hands-on, image-making journey into the materials and alchemical processes which call each participant into further visual exploration.

This weekend's program will appeal to people interested in furthering their own development, artists and non-artists seeking to understand the archetypal backdrop of image making, therapists and chaplains who work to assist others in their life struggles of becoming, and students who want to understand more deeply the contributions of C.G. Jung to the field of psychology.
